Windows Operating System

What is Microsoft Windows?
.Microsoft Windows is an operating system developed by Microsoft.

How does Windows organize storage using drive letters?
.Different storage drives are identified by letters such as C: and D:.

What is the purpose of the C:\Windows directory?
.C:\Windows contains Windows system files.

What is stored in the C:\Users directory?
.C:\Users contains personal directories and files of users.

What is the difference between Program Files and Program Files (x86)?
.Program Files stores mainly 64-bit applications.
.Program Files (x86) stores mainly 32-bit applications.

Command Prompt and PowerShell

What is the purpose of the command line?
.It allows users to interact with and manage the system using commands.

What is the difference between Command Prompt and PowerShell?
.Command Prompt is simpler, while PowerShell is more powerful and designed for scripting and administration.

Which command displays the current directory?
.cd

Which command lists files and folders?
.dir

Which command displays the current user?
.whoami

Which command displays the computer name?
.hostname

Local Users and Groups

What is the difference between a Standard User and an Administrator?
.Standard user: limited permissions.
.Administrator: high privileges.

What is a user group?
.A collection of users.

Which command lists local user accounts?
.net user

Which command lists local groups?
.net localgroup

Why are permissions important?
.They control access to files, folders, and system resources.

Active Directory

What is Active Directory?
.Active Directory is a Microsoft service used to manage users, computers, and resources.

What is a domain?
.A domain is a network managed centrally by an organization.

What is a Domain Controller?
.A server that manages the domain and authenticates users.

What is an Organizational Unit (OU)?
.An OU is a container used to organize users, computers, and other objects.

Why do organizations use Active Directory?
.To centrally manage users, computers, permissions, and security.

Group Policy

What is a Group Policy Object (GPO)?
.A GPO is a collection of settings and rules applied to users or computers.

What is the difference between Computer Configuration and User Configuration policies?
.Computer Configuration: applies to computers.
.User Configuration: applies to users.

Why are GPOs useful in large organizations?
.They allow centralized management of many computers and users.

Which command forces a Group Policy update?
.gpupdate /force

Which command displays the Group Policies applied to a computer?
.gpresult /r

Windows Event Logs

What are Windows Event Logs?
.They are records of system, application, and security events.

Which tool is used to view them?
.Event Viewer.

Name the four primary Windows log categories.
.Application, Security, System, Setup.

What is the difference between an Information event and an Error event?
.Information: normal event.
.Error: indicates a problem or failure.

Why are Event Logs useful for troubleshooting and cybersecurity?
.They help identify problems, monitor activity, and investigate security incidents.